Children don’t learn to talk by accident - they need adults to nurture and support their language and communication. The more adults know and understand about language and how it develops, the easier it is for them to help children improve their talking, understanding and listening skills.

A lot of language development happens between ages 0-5, but the following tips apply to children and young people of all ages.

1. Get their attention
   When children are absorbed in another activity, it can be hard to listen. Say their name first to get their attention and make sure they are listening.

2. Vocabulary is key
   Learning new words is incredibly important. Help children of all ages by using all their senses to teach new words. Then build in lots of repetition and practice.

3. Build on what they say
   Build on what children know and say already, to support them develop language to go to the next level; for example, taking turns with babies, adding words for toddlers, adding phrases for older children and showing teens how to debate.

4. Talk about what children are interested in
   Children and young people are much more motivated to talk when it is about something they are interested in. Ask open-ended questions where the answer is not only yes or no about a favourite hobby, for example.

5. Be careful with questions
   When adults use comments and prompts rather than questions, children join in and talk a lot more.

6. Show them the right way
   Children need time to process what others have said, work out what they are going to say and how they are going to say it. Encourage learners to show you they are listening and happy to wait.

7. Make learning language fun
   Children and young people are much more motivated to talk when it is about something they are interested in. Play around with words, make up silly rhymes - children of all ages can enjoy the fun of language. Understanding how words are made up and rhyme helps with learning to read.

8. Give children time
   Children need time to process what others have said, work out what they are going to say and how they are going to say it. Use facial expression to show you are listening and happy to wait.

9. Check out understanding
   Encourage children to ask when they are unsure; check out understanding by asking children if they have understood - can they tell you what they need to do?

10. Have conversations
    Communication is a skill like any other - the more it is practised, the better it gets. Children and young people benefit from practicing having conversations with adults as well as people their own age.

About us:
For further information, advice and resources on how to develop children’s communication skills please go to www.thecommunicationtrust.org.uk

The Communication Trust is a coalition of nearly 50 voluntary and community organisations with expertise in speech, language and communication.

We harness our collective expertise to support the children’s workforce and communities to help develop communication skills of all children and young people, particularly those with speech, language and communication needs.

The Trust was founded in 2007 by children’s charity Afasic and I CAN, together with BT and the Council for Disabled Children, to ensure that professionals can access the training and advice that they need to support the children they work with.
